La Explicación

Parte Uno

My script- Hey Noah! So in the previous conversation you see that immediately, she asks me what did I do last summer? The verb used in this question is hacer. Now, despite any time tense you are using, whether it be past, present or future, you would conjugate hacer for tú. Now, when you conjugate a verb in the preterite tense, things change a little. You notice that I say hiciste. This is not how you would conjugate any –er verb. It is different with hacer because it is an irregular verb. Also, another preterite tense verb you see is pasé. This verb is pronounced as pasar while in the infinitive state, and is conjugated with pasó when referring to the subject yo (or I). But, when you conjugate it for yo in the preterite tense, it changes from ending with –ar to é. Now, learning these conjugation rules may be a little tricky, but believe me, you will get the hang of it. (Mabintu had a script to but did not send it... It is also a video that we made.)

Parte Tres

Hey Noah, I'm back again. This time, there are multiple examples where preterite tense verbs are used. And on the other hand, there are a few present tense verbs as well. So, in the very first sentence of the conversation Mabintu asks where did I go with Maya. Normally, it would be ir, or voy if it is conjugated for I, this is in the present tense. But, since she is asking me where did I go with Maya, it makes it past tense. And of course, I respond with another form of preterite ir known as fuimos. This is the preterite form of ir when referring to the subject we. Most of the time any conjugated verb when referring to we, will have mos at the end. Also, another verb I used is seen in a previous conversation, hablar. Now hablaron is conjugated for you guys, ustedes or ellos, or ellas. In this case it is ellos. When conjugating an -ar verb for ellos, you drop the ar, and add -aron. Again, you see the preterite they form of hacer, that weird irregular verb. Notice, when using different times in one conversation be sure to stay on your toes so you can keep up with what time you are talking about. For example, Dayona says "A las chicas les gustan los cumplidos." This means "girls like compliments." Now gustar is a regular ar verb so you can use that conjugation rule I told you about earlier, drop the -ar and add -aron. Now, this would only be if it were in the preterite tense. We are talking about the present so we would conjugate it accordingly. For this you simply drop the -ar and add -an. Well now, hopefully you are a little more clear with the conjugation rules. Have fun learning Spanish Adios!!!
