Soldiers killed during WAR JFK COMMANDER of PT BOAT 109 KILLED

During the World War II a young man by the name of John Fitzgerald Kennedy decided to join the Navy and become a PT Boat Commander. His request was taken for granted and he became a commander of PT Boat 109 with a crew of 13 other men.

Him and his crew were on the water when a Japanese ship crashed into them and split the boat in half. It was reported but no one survived after the PT Boat was under the Japanese ship. They found the bodies but all 14 men did not have life vests on.

COMMANDER KENNEDY BACKGROUND

Kennedy comes from a family full of politicians. He comes from a family with 8 siblings 4 brothers and 4 sisters. JFK was the youngest out of the boys and was interested in becoming a lawyer until he was kicked out of Harvard because of health problems. So then he went to Yale and was still going for it, but then the war started up and he wanted to be a hero so he started working out to become stronger and even though he had health problems he ignored them. So he got a lil stronger and healthier and went to the navy head corders and said he wanted to join but become a pt boat commander. So of course they gave it to him because his history was about the water. He was a swimmer in Yale, he also rowed when he was in Harvard. He was a straight honor roll student but a bad boy attitude.
