I've spent my senior project combining two things that I, and many others, love: books and food. With the help of my 11th English teacher, Ms. Rami, and handful of seniors, I created the SLA Book Club. We met once a month, 5 times in the year, discussing our opinions of the books, themes, questions, and impressions of the book, over freshly carbonated drinks and fatty foods.

A meeting with the book club committee discussing ideas for the year ahead. Yes - I bought donuts.

A celebratory hug with two members during a particularly heartwarming session.

An image of the process undergone to ensure deep and thorough discussion, which is extensive notetaking. What's a better place than the book itself?
