

"We have nothing left to fight with. How can you people do this to us, our people, our country? Over and out."

The United States had planned this invasion, which was a violation of the Charter of the United Nations, saying that armed attacks were illegal with the exception of self-defense.

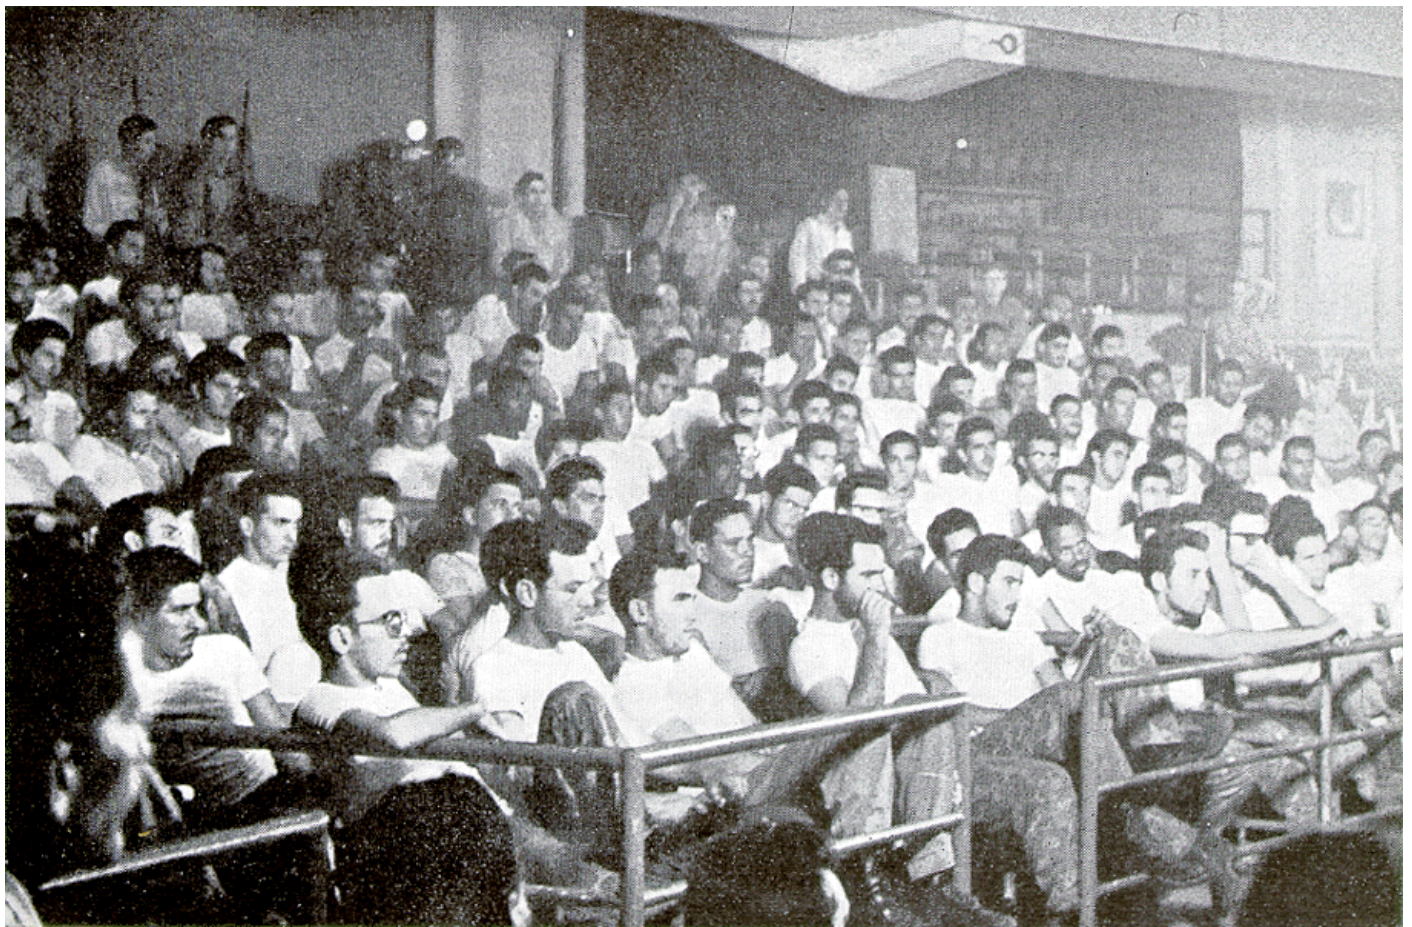

Furthermore, it was thought of by President Nixon, planned by President Eisenhower, supported by Robert F. Kennedy, and endorsed by President John F. Kennedy.

Taken into effect by the C.I.A., they had started training the Cuban rebels for an invasion of their homeland on March of 1960 in suspected locations like Guatemala and even in Louisiana.

The failed invasion left President Kennedy and his administration in embarrassment. Angry at the C.I.A., it has been confirmed that the President has fired Allen Dulles, C.I.A. director, Charles Cabell, deputy director, and the one responsible for the failed mission, Richard Bissell.

"How could I have been so stupid?" President Kennedy was also quoted, saying that he wanted to "splinter the CIA into a thousand pieces and scatter it into the winds."

Negotiations concerning the the release of the prisoners are still underway.
