

Alexa Lahr

Reflection Post

I felt my You And The World Project went pretty well. I wish I had done more research on the brain. I feel this would be good information to have. Even though I sort of had this information in the video, it would have been nice for me to go more into it. Also I wish I could have researched more on the way someone can overcome dyslexia. Even though I know about it already, because I had tutoring, I wanted to learn even more about it to gain more knowledge about it.

For my original research I felt it would have been better if I would have did more than just one interview because it would be more informative to get different people's perspectives on the topic. I was thinking about interviewing a kid that has dyslexia to get their stereotypes on it. Also it would be cool to get a doctor who specializes in dyslexia to answers on the subject, with the addition of Mr.Ames interview, so I had 3 different interviews. But the interview with Mr. Ames went very well, he gave back some good insight. He also told me some great story from kids he worked with.

For my actual Agent of Change, what I hoped for, happened. People would really talk about what dyslexia is. And you could tell by the conversations they were having, that they were getting it. I had people coming up to me asking questions and just really trying to understand dyslexia, which is what I was hoping for. I am hoping that my answers really will make them think differently about dyslexia. Again i am so happy I did this project it was a good time putting this all together and seeing the change happen!