She is from high expectations from kind, loving, confident parents and impossible dreams.

She is from dreaming of being an announcer for baseball games, despite the discrimination.

She is from a middle-class home that was sometimes poor, despite her not knowing it.

She is from single-sex schools and the drive to become whatever she wished to be.

She is from the Philadelphia School District and the hard effort needed to rise up.

She is from the Women's Liberation Movement, which helped open more doors for her.

She is from fighting against sexual harassment with no specific solution.

She is from fighting for wage equality and an end to domestic abuse.

She is from confidence, optimism, and progressiveness.

She is from support for female empowerment.

She is from love, peace, and equality.

She is from a progressive, loving family.

She is from me, and I from her.

She is my beloved grandmother.

She is Ethel Goldberg.
