DREAMER...

The slide that I created to represent who I am took trial and error, and much adjusting in order to get it visually pleasing and to make it understandable at a glance. I wanted to demonstrate implied lines on the water-line, where the water meets the trees in the image to the left. I tried to show depth within the space used, because in the image I am centered, and in the middle-ground. I wanted my body to be highly defined against the trees and water in the foreground and background. I also tried to emphasize my use of space by presenting an image on the left, and large words on a white background to the right. Color was also a large aspect of my slide design, because value is seen within the light blue hue of the water, and the dark green hue of the trees. There is also high and low intensity seen, due to the strong, bright color of the water and the dull color of the trees. This image was the ideal choice for the slide because it not only highlights my adventurous, care-free attitude, but it also has a strong feeling of texture among the rough trees and splintering wood in the water. I chose to use small black tree images to contrast with the real green trees. The contrast was truly shown with the 3-dimensional shapes of the trees and 2-dimensional shapes of the small tree drawings. The tall trees also were a great use of form, because it enclosed the height against a smaller me, all in one image. Lastly, the quote in bolded, large letters were a key element to my layout, because it emphasized the constant dreamer and explorer in me, just like the image. I am pleased with this draft of the slide, because it uses the elements of art and still shows who I am. In future edits, I hope to maybe edit the font or color of the font, for more emphasizing.
