• The most important information here was the facts about what she runs and what she oversees in her job. I picked this source from the Eagles website so I feel like if I were to interview someone from the Eagles, getting information from their own website seems like a good way to start. The only is that I do not know if this is everything or if there is some more information that would be helpful somewhere else.

Philadelphia Eagles. "Philadelphia Eagles." Jen Kavanagh, Philadelphia Eagles, www.philadelphiaeagles.com/team/front-office/jen-kavanagh.

• This just provides an overview of Jen Kavanagh. She is one of the people I would love to interview for my project so I molded my interview questions based on the information here. It goes over her prior work experience as well as some of her more personal background like where she went to school, where she lives now, etc. The most important information here was the facts about what she runs and what she oversees in her job. Shure, Joshua. "Hiring More Women in NFL among Issues Discussed by League at Phoenix Meetings." Bizjournals.com, 30 Mar. 2019, www.bizjournals.com/phoenix/news/2019/03/30/hiring-more-women-in-nfl-among-issues-discussed-by.html.

Then it goes into detail about how there was a special on tv about female owners and then talked about how there will/should be more pooourtinies for women in the NFL. I found this source helpful because it gave me some more insight about teams and certain people in the league and what their organization is doing with women in this league. One limitation to this article is that it did not go into detail too much but it had enough to start with.

• This is much more about the owners rather than the front office but this is about the women owners and what they are doing in the position that they are in. The women owners do not hold as much power as say Jerry Jones are Authur Blank. One woman owner (co-owner) who has a large say and has more power is the Buffalo Bill's
