Dear everyone, especially my readers, my name is Ya'un Pressley I want this magazine to inform everyone about myself who I am as a human and things about me that truly, in my opinion, make me myself things that make me different but also interesting. Something I believe about me that is pretty cool is I love writing paragraphs about certain subjects short stories/legends and etc. Which has kind of expressed to title this magazine "Free Mind" free is a big word that goes along with society, something a lot of people believe they aren't I believe I am free, free from my mind stress depression just everything in general. I am at peace with myself and my family with this magazine I hope to express myself and my thoughts and to express things that have determined me to be who I am today. So some things about myself are I love to stay active and stay in shape something that has helped with that is running miles every day which increases heart rates and reduces stress. I started doing this around January of 2022 and it's something I don't regret. I've learned to enjoy the sunlight and just nature in general which is something I find interesting about myself. I also enjoy being social including hanging out with people my age socializing through social media but more important hanging out with my friends I believe I am easily approachable. Some other hobbies I enjoy are basketball and I also enjoy playing the game and doing workouts and watching youtube also listening to music especially artists like Lil Baby and Lil Durk, and something I've found that I like is riding four-wheelers in desserts it's so fun to me. As 14-year-old writing this magazine I hope to change some people's thoughts about their passions or hope to inspire those my age or younger to think deeply about what they're passionate about.

Sincerely and love
Ya'un Pressley

Passion, something I believe everyone has been passionate about, is when your love for it is so deep it's addicting and it's something you believe that you want to do in the near future. Personally, it's been hard for me to figure out what those two things I'm passionate about are basketball and business ownership / entrepreneurship. I've been playing basketball for about eight plus years which is almost a decade, so a pretty long time, as 2020 arrived and covid struck it tends to change my life in not such a way I agreed with. It kind of just changed my perspective in which I stopped playing the sport I love, I've been starting to regain that same spark I had before which makes me happy. As I'm attempting to regain that love I've also found positive things in being a businessman. One thing I can say is that the support around me has been nothing but amazing, reminding me that I can do whatever I want and I could be both a businessman and a basketball player. Shout out to my dad haha he's the best dad anyone could ask for. A free mind is something I have which is the reasoning behind the name of the title for the magazine, my growth mindset has allowed me to remember that I could do both of the things I examined that I was passionate about this also allows me to believe in bettering myself a mindset that allows me to see past the stars and aim past the moon. And a mindset that allows me to remember that I never have to limit myself to anything on this earth. My passion for basketball began at a young age. The first game I remember was June 18th, 2013. That day Ray Allen made a clutch 3 in the corner to eliminate the spurs and my passion for this sport started from there. I began to watch and play every single day to learn the game and everything about it including the fundamentals of basketball. And with business, it came along during quarantine as I lost faith in basketball. I started to watch videos about owning properties and how people were benefiting from them, and me being a good negotiator I saw myself doing this. I truly thought to believe basketball is my true passion because since a young age I've been focused on it and always think about it.

A beginning journey for forever fun

On a warm summer day on June 18th, 2013, I was eight years old and about to watch my first remembrance of a basketball game. I'm pretty sure I've watched games beforehand but I was too young since I was younger I've always enjoyed watching basketball, the plays, the hard work, and the dedication each player on both teams put into this sport. The competitiveness of the sport has always been something out of the room for me and has always been enjoyable. As I'm watching the heat vs suns game my favorite player who is LeBron James was absolutely dominating with rebounds points and also assists. As we're headed to the third quarter I couldn't be more excited, as long as they kept a lead they were headed to victory. A couple of buckets we put up but the spurs have answered back with almost every other bucket the heat has gotten one thing I realized is the close attention I paid to this game, it was nothing like it the game was just so enjoyable. Heading into the fourth the movement of the players the pace of the game and the coaching became more and more adaptive as I felt like I was practically playing inside of that arena in Miami, one day praying "Ya'uri Pressley" be called on the big Jumbo Tron. As I continuously watched this game I started to realize basketball is just basic physics which is a benefit because I can put my algebra skills or math skills inside of it and combine the two.

This game also has affected my learning or me as a learner because it kind of taught me how to think more visually by watching sports games or youtube videos about tutorials or etc. Basketball in my opinion is a way to learn more about your physics in basketball and also kind of like geometry it can teach you things you may have never known before. It's coming to an end I realize the heat is no longer in the lead with 6 seconds remaining in the fourth quarter they're down by two points and have to make something happen they could either hit a three and win or take a two and take it to overtime. As the center of the heat, I tend to realize Ray Allen who is a very good basketball player and three-pointer shooter is sitting in the right corner wide open and he gets passed the ball. Five, Four, Three, Two.. As we're about to hit the last second the shot goes up and it goes in! The heat wins! Let's go heat, I knew you guys could do it! I shout out in the house as I keep smiling to my dad the heat is going to the finals. From that day forward I tend to think about that game and it makes me smile a little, basketball is something where if I can't imagine myself playing it then I'm rather watch it or spectate it in some way and if the NBA wasn't to workout I could be a broadcaster or etc. I have high hopes for my future and this game experience changed my aspect on such hoping one day I could acquire/accomplish something associated with this game. The experience of basketball throughout the years has built my visualization causing me to be decisive about my thoughts and more open to my information.
