

The boy and I lived in a very good town. The boy was just a baby. What an amazing place to grow up at. There were roads, trees, we were all very friendly to each other. The neighbors have been my friends for longer than I could remember. There was one bad thing though. The world is slowly dying. There is not enough food for everyone. They have started to cut the amount of population in the world. No more than 1 baby per family. Nobody saw it as a big problem since there was no food. Well nobody was worried until the real thing happened. "If they see you, you know what to do, use the gun"

"I'm scared papa" the boy said. This changed it all, there was no food, the social groups started to divide and find their own way of survival, the groups started making little wars if you were alone the most likely thing that would happen next is that you would get killed. Or they would kill each in between the same group, or end up eating what they could. There was no more of nature. It was all black and sad. The trees were not green anymore. The sun was drying the river's oceans. When it would rain we had to find a space to not feel the hot water burning our skins. This place changed so much that the boy would survive for a long time I would think. I would die without him. It is my only strength to live in this unfair world, where there are no more nice neighbors, there was not the amazing place where the boy could grow up. It was dry. If you survived you were lucky. It is only me and you now I thought while the boy was sleeping.

The part where this part that I wrote will go in the beginning. I feel like it would be good to know what and how they did stuff before all of those things had to occur in their lives. When reading the book I'm always wondering about that. I used something that really impacted me while I was reading which basically was the man telling the boy to kill himself if they ever found him. I used that in my part of the passage because I feel it is a big symbol of how things changed overtime and also for it to be an impact to the reader because how can a father say to kill yourself. Another thing I used is the little boy expressing his feelings, and telling the man that he is scared. We can see throughout most of the book the boy is asking questions, is confused and asks a lot about things that are no longer necessary in the time that they are living in the book.
