Project Home

<https://www.projecthome.org/homelessness-facts>

Project home is one of the most known places that helps the homeless in Philadelphia which means I can use this as a good source. I really wanted to reach out to them and try to get them to help me out with my project or collaborate. This link has all the contact information for project home in case I do want or need to reach out. It also has different tabs you can tap on for different information and that's good because I can cite them for my website. I feel like I can use a lot of information from this website for mine.

This article has a lot of information that I can use for my website such as information on how homeless people and homelessness are extremely unsupported in the US. It has a section of "defining homelessness" which I think I can add in my website towards the top. It also has a section in the article called "Limited resources, Hard decisions"

Visit a City-funded homeless intake center

If you are experiencing homelessness, you can go to an intake center and get help. You can also get help if you are at risk of losing your home.

If you are a domestic violence survivor, you can contact Women Against Abuse any time day or night at \(866\) 723-3014.

If you're 16 to 24 years old, you can go to a youth access point. Find a youth access point that offers help and services for youth your age.

Youth access points

Youth access points are not City-funded intake centers. These are safe spaces for young people experiencing homelessness to get resources and support.

You can go to any location that serves youth your age to get:

- Hygiene kits, showers, clothes, and food.
- Housing assessments.
- Job and education referrals.
- Mental health counseling referrals.
