This June Marks the 10th Anniversary of The Death of Donna Wallace

June will make the 10th anniversary of Donna Wallace of Philadelphia, Pa. Donna was killed in a school riot when tensions from desegregating her school rose to record levels. She was trampled in the playground and subsequently died of her injuries in the hospital.

This would have been Donna's senior year of high school. She would have been hoping to join the military, become a housewife or perhaps study to become a teacher at her own school one day.

Visitors to her memorial leave stuffed animals, flowers and cards, things Donna's family never would have been able to afford in her short life.

Donna reminds us all how important it is to keep schools separate. For the good of our country, our lives and our children. If Donna's school hadn't forced an unnecessary change who knows what she could be accomplishing today.
